

We took three horses to a two day cow sorting clinic where we worked on foundation moves and then worked with cattle moving them without getting them running from one point to another and around and through cone patterns. It was a great learning experience for both horses and riders. The fox trotters held their own against a crowd of Quarter Horses!

The obstacle clinics gave us a chance to work with our horses on a variety of obstacles set up in a big field. There were no time constraints, so we were able to take the time needed to help the horses gain confidence about doing things they were new to. Bridges, tire mountains, car washes, logs to drag, jump ups and drop offs were a few of the challenges as well as the work taking place in a field next to goats and burros.
